Why is there a bee in our logo?

At Spinning Wheel Brands, we are focused on not only delivering plant-based nutrition but doing so through sustainable ingredients that can be successfully cultivated via agricultural practices that are supportive, not disruptive, to the ecosystem.

This includes a focus on ingredients whose cultivation:

- Is limited in reliance on pollinators (like bees)
- Is naturally resistant to pests, as well as replenishment crops (like sesame) that can be rotated with heavy-feeders like cotton to renew the soil
- requires limited water usage required for cultivation
- crops that can be grown in many areas of the world efficiently (including sesame, potato, peas, beans) thereby opening up potential for global nutrition

Some original ingredients used in plant-based food & beverage products, like almonds, are dependent on bees to pollinate the flowers and create an adequate yield. However, crops that are bee-dependent typically also leverage harmful pesticides that are damaging to the already fragile bee population; in fact, every year the mass cultivation of almonds in the US kills 30% or more of the bees that are brought in to pollinate the almond orchards.

We believe that in order to truly create sustainable products, brands must support positive agricultural practices.

Hope & Sesame organic sesamemilk:

Hope & Sesame sesamemilk is the first non-dairy milk besides soy to deliver 8g of complete plant-based protein per serving. 'Complete' protein contains all 9 essential amino acids that aren't made by the body and must be obtained from food. Sesamemilk provides a 'good source' of protein per the FDA.

Sesame as a crop is extremely sustainable, requiring very little water to thrive, and is able to self-pollinate. In fact, sesame reinvigorates the soil and is often used on rotation with heavy feeding crops like cotton to replenish nutrients in the soil.

Sesamemilk can be used in the same ways as any other non-dairy/ alternative plant milk, and is excellent in chilled drinks, including smoothies and cold espresso drinks.

A specially formulated barista sesamemilk will be available beginning in April 2020; this is formulated to froth and steam well in hot espresso and tea drinks, and resist flocculation in hot beverages and high acid beverages.
